Wikimedia page for featured content candidates For the criteria to become a featured article, see Wikipedia: Foetured article nominations. Page too long and unwieldy? Try adding nominations viewer to your scripts page. Here, we determine which articles are to be featured articles (FAs). FAs exemplify Wikipedia's very best work and satisfy the FA criteria. All editors are welcome to review face the review and adding the review to the FAC peer review sidebar. Editors considering their first nomination, and any subsequent nomination before their first FA promotion, are strongly advised to seek the involvement of a mentor, to assist in the preparation and processing of the nomination. Nominators must be sufficiently familiar with the subject matter and sources to deal with objections during the featured article candidates (FAC) process. Nominators who are not significant contributors to the article should consult regular editors of the article before nominating it. Nominators are expected to respond positively to constructive criticism and to make efforts to address objections promptly. An article should not be on Featured article candidates and Peer review or Good article nominations at the same time. The FAC coordinators—Ian Rose, Gog the Mild, Buidhe and Hog Farm—determine the timing of the process for each nomination. For a nomination to be promoted to FA status, consensus must be reached that it meets the criteria. there is consensus. A nomination will be removed from the list and archived if, in the judgment of the coordinators: actionable objections have not been reached; insufficient information has been provided by reviewers to judge whether the criteria have been met; or a nomination is unprepared, after at least one reviewer has suggested it be withdrawn. It is assumed that all nominations have good qualities; this is why the main thrust of the process is to generate and resolve critical comments in relation to the criteria, and why such resolution is given considerably more weight than declarations of support. Do not use graphics or complex templates on FAC nomination pages. Graphics such as Done and Not done slow down the page load time, and complex templates can lead to errors in the FAC archives. For technical reasons, templates that are acceptable are {{collapse top}} and {{collapse top}}, used to hide offtopic discussions, and templates such as {{green}} that apply colours to text and are used to highlight examples without altering fonts. Other templates such as {{tq}}, and {{xt}}, may be removed. An editor is allowed to be the sole nominator of only one article at a time, but two nominations may be allowed if the editor is a co-nominator on at least one of them. If a nomination is archived, the nominator(s) should take adequate time to work on resolving issues before re-nominator; if such an article is nominated without asking for leave, a coordinator will decide whether to remove it. A coordinator may exempt from this restriction an archived nomination that attracted no (or minimal) feedback. Nominations in urgent need of review are listed here. To contact the FAC talk page, or use the {{@FAC}} notification template elsewhere. A bot will update the article talk page after the article is promoted or the nomination archived; the delay in bot processing can range from minutes to several days, and the {{FAC}} template should remain on the talk page until the bot updates {{Article history}}. All editors are welcome to review nominations; see the review FAQ for an overview of the review process. To support a nomination, write *"Support", followed by your reason(s), which should be based on a full reading of the text. If you have been a significant contributor to the article before its nomination, please indicate this. A reviewer who specializes in certain areas of the FA criteria should indicate whether the support is applicable to all of the criteria. To oppose a nomination, write *"Object" or *"Oppose", followed by your reason(s). Each objection must provide a specific rationale that can be addressed. If nothing can be done in principle to address the objection, a coordinator may disregard it. References on style and grammar do not always agree; if a contributor cites support for a certain style in a standard reference work or other authoritative source, reviewers should consider accepting it. Reviewers who object are strongly encouraged to return after a few days to check whether their objection has been addressed. To withdraw the objection, strike it out (with ...) rather than removing it. Alternatively, reviewers may transfer lengthy, resolved commentary to the FAC archive talk page, leaving a link in a note on the FAC archive talk page, leaving a link in a note on the FAC archive talk page. create a neutral fourth-level subsection, named either ==== Review by EditorX ==== comments by EditorX ==== (do not use third-level or higher section headers). Please do not create subsections for short statements of support or opposition—for these a simple *''Support''', *'''Oppose''', or *'''Comment''' followed by your statement of opinion, is sufficient. Please do not use a semicolon to bold a subheading; this creates accessibility problems. If a nominator feels that an Oppose has been addressed, they should say so, either after the reviewer's signature, or by interspersing their responses in the list provided by the reviewer. Per talk page guidelines, nominators should not cap, alter, strike, or add graphics to comments from other editors. If a nominator finds that an opposing reviewer is not returning to the nomination page, with a diff to the reviewer's talk page showing the request to reconsider. Nikkimaria (talk) 03:34, 13 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Comments from ErnestKrause Fairly nicely written and organized article about this well-known tourist visiting spot in NYC. Would it be of any interest to possibly consider adding a section dealing with the artistic renderings of the building as it has been visited by artists and moviemakers over the past several decades, such as here: [1]. It seems like I've seen in several NYC movies such as the ones by Woody Allen and other directors. Also architects have made artistic renderings of high quality, etc. Could you consider such a section for this article. As a separate point, the lead section should say more about the centrality of the building to the campus, it needs more emphasis as the cornerstone for the entire campus, rather than just simple focal point; you already have some of this in the section on this topic which you could move up into the lead section. ErnestKrause (talk) 14:24, 13 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Thanks for the comments ErnestKrause. I've edited the lead to emphasize the fact that Low is actually at the center of Columbia's Morningside Heights campus (the university has since expanded to another campus in nearby Manhattanville, hence the clarification). Unfortunately, so far, I haven't been able to find many reliable secondary sources, although the university's own website has a couple of pages describing film appearances. I thought it would be a violation of WP:OVERLINK. Also, there is no Wikipedia article for that topic. It's a redirect to Parental Advisory. Not a big deal though, I'll just wiki-link it now. -VersaceSpace 15:44, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] (2) Regarding the theme of explicit lyrics, this genre is well established in rap for at least 2-3 decades, however, you do not discuss the difference between explicit lyrics used for political opposition and explicit lyrics used for sexual intents. The song you are nominating makes no secret about which version of explicit sexual lyrics are being used in the song. This one has confused me a bit. Why would this difference be established? —VersaceSpace 15:44, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] (3) There is no Lyrics section in the article. Because of the nature of the Lyrics, it seems that there should be at least a little more about the content. To start with there is the monotonously repeat back-up lyrics from start to finish in this song "There's some whores in this house" which seem to have reliable sources discussing them. A Lyrics section would be a good place to discuss this, as well as the main lyrics of the song, in addition to the back-up lyrics. Is a composition section not sufficient for this purpose? If you'd like, I could add a paragraph about this there. --VersaceSpace 15:44, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] (4) History. There is a long tradition of explicit sexual lyrics in rap and funk which might be mentioned in the history section of this article which is presently not covered. Rick James did "Superfreak" several decades ago, and a decade ago there was "Sweat" by Snoop Dog. Are you saying that none of the reliable sources, but I fail to see why it's relevant for this article. -VersaceSpace 15:44, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] (5) Your Impact and Legacy section which is currently and Legacy section which is currently the End of the song which is currently and Legacy section which is currently a

There is currently a left side image which seems to separate the text from its section title. Fixed. -VersaceSpace 15:44, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] (7) For the video section, was there any discussion in RS about the selection and use of model types used in this video. The models do not look like 'Victoria's Angels' models, though they are not quite 'plus' sized models either. How were they described by RS? Was the selection process discussed by RS? Everything I've seen about the casting of the music video, though I could have missed something. I will note that inclusiveness of this sort is far more common these days. -VersaceSpace 15:44, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] (8) There is a significant social discussion in the press about movie rating and media ratings to protect children from obscenity and prurient content; is it making more comment about this in this article. For example, many parents are sensitive to R-rating, and do not let their children go to these movies. Similarly for explicit sexual song content. For this one I'd like you to go more in depth. I see your point, but I don't know what you want me to do. -VersaceSpace 15:44, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] (9) I'll need to agree with Nick's comments below as well; there seems to be a issue with how comprehensive your list of RS for the article has been. I've already asked for some more RS above, and the other more conventional search engines to find sources. The 'comprehensiveness' issue is going to be an issue for this kind of FAC nomination. (10) I'm still not sure about the question of why the article does not have a conventional Lyrics section and a conventional Music section. Music section also seems absent here which key the song is written in, what the metronome setting is for the song, if there are any key changes, etc. This seems an important thing to add to this article. Let me know if there are any key changes, etc. This seems an important thing to add to this article. A lot of women aside from music critics found it empowering, yet this doesn't seem to be discussed. This was the second event I managed to get to in the last five years. A superb week in a great venue - with some images taken during the event in the article. The Welsh Open is often a good but minor event, but for two years straight has had a great narrative. The previous year's winner Jordan Brown won his first event, ranked 80th in the world. This year, perennial journeyman Joe Perry won the event, defeating the majorly in-form Ricky Walden in the guarter-finals, Jack Lisowski (who had won a match of the season contender against Ali Carter in the round prior), a serial winner Judd Trump in the final to win his second ranking event, the first being a minor 2015 Players Tour Championship Grand Final win. Perry's win was at age 47, the second oldest winner of a ranking event (at the time). A great event, and hopefully a well written and researched article. Aoba47 (talk) 17:32, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Wikipedia does not typically ask editors go to other articles to verify information. While a citation would not be needed to say someone is a singer in a song article (the fact that a person released a song is enough to verify that they are a singer is verified because they sang the song, so it doesn't need to be explicitly stated), the fact that someone is a socialite is not inherently implied by the release of a song. It doesn't need to be cited in the body with a citation. Since I am not very familiar with song/music articles, I will leave that to your discretion on whether it should be added and won't let this affect my support, because at the end of the day this is relatively minor. Z1720 (talk) 00:00, 8 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] How would you introduce and cite this information in the article? I cannot think of a way that would not come across as awkward? Aoba47 (talk) 01:32, 8 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The best way I can think of to do so is in the first sentence of "Recording and release" to say, "American socialite Paris Hilton co-wrote "I Need You" with its producer Michael Green..." Again, I am not very familiar with song articles, so if this seems awkward then I do not recommend putting it in the article unless another reviewer also flags this. Z1720 (talk) 01:42, 8 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] That would not work in my opinion. Look at featured articles on songs, such as "I'm Goin' Down", "Dear Future Husband", and "Sound and Vision", and none of them use a descriptive phrase for the primary artist. I thought about including a sentence or two in the "Recording and release" section about how Hilton is a socialite who first pursued a music career by an album in 2006, but it seemed odd to include this for something outside her first musical release and it came across like padding to me. For clarification, I am also hesitant to change the lede to say "American singer Paris aspects of her career outside of music. I am just not sure how to best approach this to accommodate your suggestion. Apologies. Aoba47 (talk) 01:58, 8 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Z1720: Just so you are aware, I have added a brief paragraph to the beginning of the article about how Hilton was a socialite who pursued a music career. I don't personally remember this season, as it was [mumble] years before I was born, but it was enjoyable to write about and to take a peek into the heady days when floodlights were a new concept, goal average was used, and players were called things like Geoff and Brian :-) Feedback as ever will be most gratefully received and swiftly acted upon -- ChrisTheDude (talk) 14:52, 4 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Images are appropriately licensed. It's not part of the bolded phrase in English Football League "Gillingham began the season with an unbeaten run of 13 games, the longest such run from the start of the season by any team in the Football League," I'm not liking the repetition of "run". Maybe, "Gillingham were undefeated in their first 13 games, the longest such streak from the start of the season by any team in the Football League," or something similar "The team played a total of 52 competitive matches," Delete "a total of 18 in all competitions." Same as above After re-reading the lede, I'm surprised that there is no mention of the team leaving the season in Jan/Feb and the fan's reaction. This feels like a key detail to me. Other discussions not mentioned above Wikipedia talk: Featured article review/Texas A&M University/archive1 Wikipedia: Peer review/Texas A&M University/archive2 Oppose My comments in the most recent FAC do not seem to have been addressed. For instance, the article still doesn't discuss the integration of women and minority students (though room could be found for a a full para on the women's basketball team!) and the para on the statue continues to use evasive language that privileges the views of the university's administration. As a spot check, the statement that "The event received worldwide attention during World War II, when 25 Aggies held a brief Aggie Muster during the battle for the island of Corregidor" is not supported by the source, which refers to this receiving attention only in the US. Nick-D (talk) 11:00, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] "the article still doesn't discuss the integration of women and minority students (though room could be found for a a full para on the women's basketball team!)" Based on this feedback, I've added two more sentences in the history section explaining the integration of women/minorities in the 70s (the whole 140 year history is summarized into ~60 sentences). Given the overall impact, I think that, in addition to the other half dozen sentences). Given the overall impact, I think that, in addition to the other half dozen sentences in the history section is appropriately balanced good and bad. Yes, the women's basketball team (which, perplexingly, is part of the "discuss the integration of women..." you asked for above...I mean, I'm really confused here.) has enjoyed a long string of major success. As such, 4 sentences outlining 30+ years in the athletics section is appropriate. I'm not sure what you want. Less on the Basketball team? More? "the para on the statue continues to use evasive language that privileges the views of the university's administration." I've repeatedly asked you what "evasive language" you are alleging and you have yet to clarify in 9+ months. The paragraph summarizes this situation in 3 sentences: the climate under which there was controversy the official university position prior the protests, counterprotests, and the ultimate decision by the university I'm very hard pressed to see what else you'd like to see added/changed. It isn't "administration heavy" by any stretch of the imagination. An informal student senate survey (which most everyone acknowledged was statistically questionable based on its sampling methodology based on poor student sampling...those with strong negative feelings responded at significantly higher rates than the general student population and there were poor controls on who could respond [more than one student came forward claiming they'd tried to respond to the survey to oppose any action only to find they'd allegedly submitted a response already]) showed that the student body opposed the statue's removal by a ratio of 2:1, but the results were highly striated on racial lines. I've asked you for further clarification in the past as to what you think should be changed. I cannot address a point that is so vague. Could you perhaps be more specific? Give me a sentence or two that would illustrate the shortfalls/the changes you want? If you want me to include the unscientific student poll, I'll be happy to do so, but I don't think it changes anything substantive in the paragraph. "As a spot check, the statement that 'The event received worldwide attention during World War II, when 25 Aggies held a brief Aggie Muster during the battle for the island of Corregidor' is not supported by the source, which refers to this receiving attention only in the US." While the Houston Chronicle is read worldwide, I'm not going to review. Oppose and recommend withdrawal. This is the first time I have looked at this article, US education not normally being my thing. But I thought this FAC may benefit from fresh eyes. I still haven't read all of it, as it seems clear to me that this is not yet ready for FAC. I could go on at some length about specific points and areas, but I shall stay with those used by Nick-D above. I note in passing that the nominator's responses to Nick-D's very clear and clearly made points (to my eye, coming across them and the article for the first time) puzzle me. I am unsure if the responses are deliberately evasive or reflect, somehow, genuine bafflement as to the points being made. Neither bodes well for a constructive exchange of opinions leading to promotion. The para on the statue does seem to use "language that privileges the views of the university's administration." As I've asked repeatedly, can you please specify what it is that you feel meets that criteria? I'm happy to rewrite it. Buffs (talk) 20:32, 11 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The paragraph in which the erection of the statue is covered also seems PoV: eg "well-respected Confederate Brigadier". "well-respected" is the exact verbiage of the source. Would it be better to place it in quotes? Buffs (talk) 20:32, 11 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] In this paragraph there is a longer sentence on the statue than on the first admission of women, which would seem to cry out for some background and context; come to that, whether any women ever did attend classes. (And if so, how many, when and whether on an equal footing?) "whether any women ever did attend classes" apparently you skipped the lead which states that the institution is currently coeducational. Still in this paragraph "Enrollment doubled to 467 cadets". As of what date? And doubled from what number and when? The last mention of numbers is "Enrollment climbed to 258 students"? The number of cadets doubled under his tenure. think that's pretty implicit from the given sentence (before he arrived: x, after: 2x). I don't think we need to specify a number, but I will be happy to do so if that's your hangup (please clarify if I'm missing something). There is no effective difference between "cadets" and "students" at this point in the school's history. Buffs (talk) 20:32, 11 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] "had a separate Board of Directors". Note that if all of the points above were addressed this would not change my mind; almost every paragraph has similar - and/or different but equally egregious - issues. I recommend withdrawal, a thorough visit to PR and another to GoCE. Gog the Mild (talk) 21:26, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I asked for clarification almost 3 months ago from you so I could address any shortcomings, but you chose to provide no feedback until now. No one to-date, has brought up the concerns you brought up despite the review of (by my count) about 60 people. Almost all were easily corrected and were at least arguably accurate, but, you wanted more specificity, so I obliged. I've added the additions you sought, but the article is getting increasingly/inappropriately long. Previous reviews complained about the length. When you say "add more" and others say "shorten it" and both of you say "...or it doesn't get my FA blessing", it's a no-win situation. This idea that it needs to go through two more processes seems more than unnecessary for trivial and easily fixed changes. If you could be so kind as to clarify and let me know whether I've addressed your points, it would be appreciated Buffs (talk) 21:39, 11 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Gog the Mild: "I am unsure if the responses are deliberately evasive or reflect, somehow, genuine bafflement". August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Support from Tim riley I turned up too late for the peer review, but it looks as though I wouldn't have had much to contribute in any case. I have only four minor quibbles on the present text: Background "...thus became the first king of all England. He died in October 939 and was succeeded by his half-brother and Edmund, who was the first king to succeeded him, the latter must ipso facto have been the first king to succeed to the throne of all England. (As Eadwig had only one father I'd put a comma before "Edmund" if I were writing the sentence, but we won't fall out over the point.) Historians distinguish between the two cases. Æthelstan succeeded as king of the Anglo-Saxons and only became king of England when he conquered Northumbria. Edmund was the first to succeed as king of England. I am open to suggestions of how to express this more clearly. Added the comma before Edmund. Fine. I do not press the point. It has everything that made Gaga famous—catchy chorus, elaborate music video, outlandish costumes and nonsensical chanting. I have been working on this article intermittently for quite some years now. A few months ago, I digged deep for academic sources and found to my delight many of them. A song called the catchiest in the world by a prominent organization of psychology should have the highest-quality article on Wikipedia. Kinda reviewers, help me make that happen. Aoba47 (talk) 16:27, 3 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I do not think the citation in the infobox is needed as this information should be present and cited in the article. I do not think it is controversial enough that a person is credited under their legal name for songwriting credit to require this citation. I would spell out extended play on its first use in the lead to help readers who are not 100% familiar with the concept. I'd look at "All About That Bass" as an example of what I mean. The body of the article should mention that The Fame Monster is an EP and a reissue, which it currently does not. I am uncertain about the "full-throated" quote. In the article, it is not given clear attribution in the prose, and I am not sure if a quote like that works in the lead. I think this part, attraction to individuals with whom romance never works, her preference for lonely relationships, reads a little awkwardly and would benefit from revision. This information could be conveyed more concisely and the phrase "lonely relationships" seems off in particular to me. I have tweaked it. I do not think the French bridge is notable enough to include in the lead. I also could not find this information in the article. This part, The recipient of a Grammy Award for Best Female Pop Vocal Performance, it was, is not grammatically correct. if read literally, it says that the song won the award, when the award was given to Gaga. For the Saturday Night Live bit, I'd clarify that Gaga performed the song to avoid any potential misinterpretation. The "released" is used twice in close succession in the first paragraph of the "Background and release" section. I do not think the caption is more focused on the lyrics, which could be illustrated through the prose alone, and I would instead do something about the song's genre or sound. I played around with it quite a bit and in every scenario, it fails WP:NFC. I have removed it. Is there a reason for using a university's sheet music over musicnotes.com? Musicnotes is generally badly received at FAC, and it is usually not known if the sheet posted there is in fact the original or just another version posted by the label/singer. I believe a university source than one which does not even have its own article on Wikipedia should be the better choice, no? I have seen the issues are not specific to that site, but they are more about sheet music in general. I could be wrong and it would likely be better to have a more experienced editor comment on this, but the university could have the same issue as the website. The university could have a specific arrangement, but there is not a clear guarantee that this is the case. Again, I'd go with a more experienced editor's opinion, but I think the issue is really with sheet music in general. Aoba47 (talk) 20:46, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Not to get super nitpick-y, but I'd revise this part, The song then plays keyboard sounds, as I do not think a song can play anything. For this part, a postdoctoral fellow in American studies at University of Erlangen-Nuremberg, I would remove the university as it is not necessary and it would benefit from revision. I would lead with how it connects to Gaga's LGBT audience since I was a little confused by this sentence until I got to the second half of it. The final two paragraphs of the "Music and lyrics" section has a lot of great content, but could you tell me how you organized it? I think it would benefit from a clearer structure. I have done quite some rearranging, with the third one being about unhealthy relationships and the title's meaning (which is the same thing: "bad romance"). The last one is entirely about Horn's analysis. Hopefully, the structure is more comprehensable. I hope this review is helpful. These are my comments up until the "Critical reception" section. I will continue my review once everything has been addressed. Best of luck with this FAC! Aoba47 (talk) 17:19, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] There is not a clear citation supporting this part, with praise for its chorus, beat and hook. The citations are the follow-up reviews in that para. That was not immediately clear to me and I think it looks off when there is a citation in the middle of a sentence, but not at the end. Aoba47 (talk) 20:48, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I'd avoid one-word quotes like "relentlessly" as they are not particularly informative and they take away from the other quotes. This Rolling Stone citation has an author, but they are not included in the prose. I have noticed some other issues with how critics are attributed in the prose. While the article often includes critics' names, there are instances like "a critic from Rolling Stone" and "The Billboard review" where the name is not used so it is rather confusing, it is placed in a weird spot in this section. It is in a paragraph that is praising the song, and this does not fit that. It is also not really a review of the song. It is more of a study or analysis. I'd be careful with the following wording, "They felt it was not on par" and lacking the "instant catch" is a critique from both reviewers instead of the individuals. Apologies for jumping in with some additional comments already. I just noticed some issues I wanted to raise first. While I can tell a lot of great work has been put into the article, I am not sure if it is fully prepared for a FAC (but I will leave that up to other reviewers). Aoba47 (talk) 17:44, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] No apologies needed. This was nominated just now after a PR so resolving the issues shouldn't be a major problem. I'll see if this can be done within the FAC scope. If not, well I'm sure we can figure something out. Cheers, FrB.TG (talk) 17:59, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Thank you, Aoba47, for your comments. I have done quite some rearranging in "music and lyrics" and "critical reception" sections. FrB.TG (talk) 20:03, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Thank you for your responses and for being understanding about everything. I will continue my review later today or tomorrow if that is okay with you. Aoba47 (talk) 20:50, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I am guessing the music video synopsis is sourced with the video as the primary source; would that be correct? The synopsis seems a little on the long side, and I am wondering it could be made a little more concise. That is correct, as per WP:FILMPLOT. I have trimmed the subsection a little. set-piece and costumes, does not have a citation. I am guessing that this part is supported by the citations later on in the middle and none at the end. For the "Reception and thematic analysis" subsection, would it be worthwhile to separate the reviews and the analysis? This subsection looks quite long and I think that further structure may make it looks less intimidating to readers. I am not convinced that File:Praying mantis india.jpg is necessary, especially since the "insect" dress is not being shown so there really is not much of a comparison being made. The university in this part, sociologist Mathieu Deflem of University of South Carolina, is not necessary so I would remove it. I am uncertain about the sentence starting with this part, Calling it a "culture-breaking moment". This sentence is pushing together two different writtens and it gives off the impression that they were either written by the same person or downplays the individual reviewers. This is more of a note than anything. I'd be cautious about the size of the "Live performances" section in the future. It is pretty much guaranteed that Gaga will continually perform this song throughout her career due to its popularity so I'd be wary of this section becoming too big or overly detailed. You are absolutely right. I did some trimming and removed some superfluous information and recording processes) should also be written out in the prose of the article, likely in the "Background and release" section. I am not sure what "actor" means in the "Personnel" section? Neither do I. It must have been vandalized at some point and nobody noticed. Both MTV or if MTV News are used in the citations 63, 64, 73, 107, 114 use MTV News. I would be consistent with one way or the other. I'd go with MTV News as it is more specific. Citation 140 is missing the author. Citation 229 should have its title translated to English. This is true of any citations with titles in a non-English language. Done wherever possible. In some places, the ref. is automatically generated as part of {{single chart}}, which cannot be modified. Simon Price should be linked in the article and in the citation. This should be all of my comments for my first read-through of the article. I hope that this review was helpful and not too nit-picky at all and was very helpful. The article has improved in leaps and bounds now. Hopefully, this is now enough to convince you of the article's quality at the FA level. One comment I would add here is that I think this was used in the context of the very last show which Alexander McQueen did before the end of his life and that there are reliable sources for this. Since Lady Gaga was a follower of his designs, mentioning this as his very last full fashion show with reliable sources might be a good addition to the article. One is in the infobox and is the album cover. It has an appropriate fair use rationale and alt text. There is also one other fair use image, which is a still from the music video showing the choreography of the song. I agree with its fair use as irreplaceable content discussed in a critical manner in the article. Of the other five images: One has a VRT ticket confirming approval for use under CC-BY-SA 4.0. The remainder were posted under various CC licenses (confirmed by Flickreview). Two images need alt text: File:The Monster Ball - Bad Romance revamped3.jpg and File; Glee-Born This Way.jpg. Critical reception—"by Pitchfork—which called it "epic in construction"—MTV News" perhaps a comma after the quote "epic in construction"? "Gaga sang "Bad Romance" during her residency show, Lady Gaga Enigma + Jazz & Piano (2018-2022); on her Enigma and Jazz & Piano are two shows or one.. I am confused I think the Glee version entered some charts; should we mention them? For the track listings they say that it is not standard practice to include such a section unless the track listings received extensive commentary. Given that none of the remixes listed here are discussed in prose, I'd remove the section altogether. I don't know it's unusual for a song to have this many versions with different durations. It can be part of prose if necessary (in Background and release section for example). I personally don't find the track listings helpful, but I'd leave it to other editors. I think it's better to include table captions for separate years; i.e. one for 2009 year-end charts and one for 2010 year-end charts... I'm not sure that is necessary since it was released pretty late in 2009, and the song's peak was somewhere between 2009 and 2010. For 2017, for example, it makes sense since it and 2009 are several years apart. I do think it is helpful to include table captions for separate years. While it may be clunky, it helps with accessibility. This concludes my prose review. Apart from my comments I made some minor edits that are hopefully beneficial. A great read overall! My instinct is that we shouldn't be saying he predicted Truman's victory in wikivoice, but I'd be interested to hear your views. I remember thinking about this when I published the article the previous year, and yes this is a tricky part. Given the abundance of sources in favor of Bean, we can say that in Wikivoice. The recent Campbell source does says that the book which Bean authored in early 1948 (which would be before the election) contained "passages that suggested a Democratic victory in the presidential election". And in the article, we say that he predicted Truman to win in the book. This is supported by the say that he predicted Truman to win in the book. the NYT source as well. We also have the fact that, days before the election, he did change his stand. We cannot, for sure, in 2022, know what happened in '48, but almost all modern sources used in the article agree that he is most famous for predicting Truman to win, including NYT, The Washington Post, and partially even Rosenof. We also have in the article the viewpoint the Bean made no clear prediction. Here is where the criteria 1c applies, "thorough and representative survey of the relevant literature", and even perhaps WP:VNT. - Kavyansh.Singh (talk) 09:38, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I understand; it's just that the "If different reliable sources make conflicting assertions about a matter, treat these assertions as opinions rather than facts, and do not present them as direct statements" part of WP:NPOV gives me pause. Perhaps consider something like this: "In his book, Bean—unlike almost all other observers—argued that a Truman victory was possible; he cited the likelihood of high turnout and the unpopularity of the Republican Congress's policies to suggest that the political environment was favorable to Democrats. (Cite to pg. 23 of this book by Rosenof.)" Then keep the "On election day...'a major miracle'" sentence. "Bean's book earned him a reputation for successfully predicting Truman's victory (cite Rosenof's article, pg. 69): Life magazine referred to him as the "Lone Prophet" of Truman's victory, and the Alfred A. Knopf publishing company, which publicized Bean's book, began advertising: "Oh Mr. Gallup! Oh Mr. personal correspondence suggests that "in the end, however hesitantly", he "accepted the polls that consistently showed Dewey solidly ahead nationally". (cite pg. 72 of Rosenof's article)" The idea is that it describes what Bean said without taking a position on the disputed issue of whether he actually predicted Truman's victory, while still providing both the mainstream view (the book "earned him a reputation for successfully predicting Truman's victory") and an alternative perspective from Rosenof. Hopefully that's helpful; feel free to use as much or as little of it as you like. The critical reception section somewhat suffers from the "A said B, C said D" where one opinion is listed after another, making it repetitive at places. For example, the second section begins with some reviewers deeming the album repetitiveness ... critic A called it repetitiveness ... critic A called it repetitive". I intended "Title's repetitiveness drew criticism" as a summary statement for the second paragraph so the repetition here is intentional. It is written with WP:CRS in mind and each paragraph tries to drive home the point expressed in its first sentence. I understand your point about repeating the exact same wording, though, so I have rephrased this particular example. I get that and that's what I am trying to emphasize. Especially in the planning phases, when various alignments were proposed. "In 2000, the Oregon portion was designated as the War Veterans Memorial Highway, and has since been used for an annual vehicle convoy to mark Veterans Day." Question: shouldn't it be "is designated" instead of "was designated", since the name is still being used? Feels natural to me. As far as I understand it, past tense is acceptable here due to its relationship with the present perfect tense used later in the sentence. I might suggest the segment "served by Amtrak's Cascades route" to be written as a footnote Dropped Cascades, as it doesn't really have much to do with the highway in general. Similarly for "on the west side for the TriMet". Alternatively "on the west side for the TriMet". Alternatively "on the west side for the MAX Green Line, a light rail service operated by TriMet". could be turned into a parenthetical note instead if it's still disrupting the sentence's flow. I do probably suggest putting "a light rail service operated by TriMet" as a footnote then.--ZKang123 (talk) 08:04, 15 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] "The incomplete interchange is located southwest of Washington State University Vancouver and requires some movements from I-5 towards Vancouver to be made via two half-diamond interchanges on Northeast 134th Street." Actually, I wonder, can there be some sort of gif showing the progression of the highway alignment over time, like it was done for a couple of metro articles? Or at least a map of the expressway with the segments built by year. progression map, but I'll look into it. I don't think I'd be able to produce an alternate alignments map as many of them were not republished in easy-to-access places, so much of it would be guesswork on my part. Not to worry. They're only occasionally named, but never prominent unless there's an issue or incident during construction. Normally, they are local firms or joint ventures that form solely for the project's few years of existence. Ah, in Singapore we normally hand out contracts to established construction firms. Three fairly substantial fragments of her poetry survive, and her works preserve versions of Greek myths not otherwise attested. Despite this, the main scholarly interest in Corinna over the past century has been the surprisingly contentious debate about when she actually lived - despite this being the one fact about her life which is unanimously agreed upon by the ancient sources! I brought Corinna up to GA back in 2019; this year I submitted it for peer review and got helpful comments from Mujinga, SusunW, Kaiser matias, and Tim riley. As far as I can tell, I have read nearly every piece of English-language scholarship about Corinna written in the past century, and I think the article is now ready to be examined at FAC. Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 16:15, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] a typical period for M dwarfs --> I thought it was a red dwarf? somewhere earlier it needs to state it is an M dwarf, with explanation or at least a link Per our article, they are (mostly) synonyms. I don't have a source for its definition. Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 16:15, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I see. But we have to say this somewhere, perhaps right after where you talk about its temperature. Something like "TRAPPIST-1 has an effective temperature[h] of 2,566 K (2,293 °C; 4,159 °F), making it fall within the definition of an M dwarf." AFAIK the definition is mostly a matter of spectrum, only indirectly of temperature. Added a note for red dwarf to explain that. Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 21:41, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Sorry to be a pain, but I'm not convinced adding a note is good enough. I don't think we can rely on users reading the note. As it stands now "typical period for M dwarfs" is puzzling because the reader has not been told whether Trappist-1 is an M dwarf? Recast this. It interrupts the main point about the sun comparison. I would delete it. Well, this paragraph discusses both the past and the future of the star sequentially, so I wouldn't agree. Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 16:15, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] OK, if you want to hang on to it, then make it at least easier for the reader to understand your point by not intertwining two comparisons. So something like "The life expectancy of a small, faint star like TRAPPIST-1 is hundreds to thousands of times longer than that of stars like the Sun:[27] TRAPPIST-1 is expected to shine for ten trillion years, while the Sun will leave the main sequence (run out of hydrogen[i]) in a few billion years. TRAPPIST-1 1's life expectancy is about 700 times[48] longer than the present age of the Universe." I am kind of concerned about inserting the solar lifespan in the middle of the sentence as that proposal does. Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 21:41, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Sorry for being so astronomically clueless, but the way I understand what you have now is as follows: 1) "The life expectancy of a small, faint star like TRAPPIST-1 is hundreds to thousands of times longer than that of stars like the Sun:" == comparison to Sun lifespan. 2) "TRAPPIST-1. 3) "about 700 times[49] longer than the present age of the Universe" = comparison to Universe. 4) "while the Sun will leave the main sequence (run out of hydrogen[j]) in a few billion years" = absolute Sun. I had a hard time understanding 1) because 3) is in the middle of 2) and 4). To me as a layman person 2) and 4). To me as a layman person 2) and 4) should be next to each other in order to make sense of 1), which has a colon to tell me what is coming. Attempted a rewrite. Edwininlondon (talk) 21:08, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Comments (support) from ComplexRational As I noted at the close of the peer review, I'm quite pleased with the improvements to this article since FAC1. I just gave it another quick review (having done the bulk of reviewing during the PR) and pending a few minor formatting fixes, removed a couple of duplinks, and changed a second occurrence of magma ocean (in the section TRAPPIST-1b) to the more specific lava planet. See my comment above re alt text - the infobox image does not have an option for ALT text, it seems like. Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 17:39, 9 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Would it work to specify |alt= in the file link itself? I don't see anything suggestive of the contrary. Complex/Rational 22:38, 9 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Indeed it does in the alt text viewer (toolbox). I might also suggest mentioning that TRAPPIST-1 is located very close to the ecliptic Complex/Rational 16:21, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I already noted this in one case at the PR - sources published by exactly the same authors in the same year should be distinguished, e.g., 2014a, 2014b, per this and similar guidelines. This is nicely done in some cases, though I've noticed a few instances of broken numbering (e.g., there's a Gillon 2020b but no Gillon 2020a) as well as slightly different author listings. I propose standardizing the authors (even with et al.) and numbering sequence. I think I got these? Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 17:39, 9 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Still needs a bit of work. In the list of sources, months and days are also provided in some cases, which serve to distinguish the sources there. I'm not sure if style guidelines permit, e.g., "April 2018a" and "July 2018b" unless there are multiple papers from either month with exactly the same authors. In these cases, it should suffice to leave them without letters in the list (using letters only as a "last resort" when authors and dates are not sufficient), but rather distinguish them using WP:CITEREF; thus, the list would include April 2018 and July 2018 but the footnotes would use 2011a - there's only one paper by Prantzos on the list. Complex/Rational 22:38, 9 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Good work! Sportsfan77777 (talk) 21:54, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Lead What's rationale for calling TRAPPIST-1 just a star as opposed to a "planetary system" or a "star with a planetary system" or a "stellar system")? The website calls it a "planetary system" and I would think that when most people say TRAPPIST-1 they are referring to the planetary system, not specifically the star. (i.e. The equivalent article is the solar system, not specifically the star.) The article covers both, unlike Sun-Solar System, but added planetary system. Jo-Jo Eumerus (talk) 16:43, 11 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Related to that, I would suggest mentioning TRAPPIST-1 has seven known planets in the first paragraph to give that more emphasis. Edwininlondon (talk) 16:27, 6 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Described as a "roller coaster" and a "Scalextric" by sources over the years, the Coventry ring road is either a marvel of engineering or the world's worst-designed road and a source of urban decay, depending on your point of view. Its multiple lanes, slip roads and short weaving distances make it a bit of a nightmare for drivers new to the area, something I've witnessed first-hand a few times over the years! The article goes into some detail, chronicling the history of the project from its early conception to completion, a mid-project redesign and later remodelling of one of the junctions and the road's reputation. All comments and feedback welcome. Cheers — Amakuru (talk) 16:27, 6 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Image review Don't use fixed px size Suggest adding alt text. Which is a little unusual. And if Notes has nothing in it it should be removed. And why the "0.0"s at the bottom of the "mi" and "km" columns? Gog the Mild (talk) 17:29, 12 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Gog the Mild: I initially put them in their own column, per other UK road articles, but Imzadi1979 then refactored it. I personally did prefer it the way I had written it earlier today, which also had the detail about what the name of the road is at each stage, but I'm happy to go with the consensus on what's best. — Amakuru (talk) 18:17, 12 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I much prefer it the way you had it before, that looks much more accessible to the uninitiated. Gog the Mild (talk) 18:27, 12 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] OK, since I also agree with that, I have restored the original layout for now. While the general principles are there, it seems to me that on the detail, MOS:RJL doesn't enjoy consensus for UK roads anyway, as most of them that I can see don't follow its suggested layout. Even M5 motorway#Junctions, which is the actual example cited at MOS:RJL, it is formatted completely differently from the recommendation. The layout should be appropriate for the road in question IMHO. Cheers — Amakuru (talk) 19:58, 12 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] MOS:RJL is part of the Manual of Style, and the FA criteria require compliance with the MOS. At a bare minimum, the first two columns need to be removed for compliance. The repeat of J1 should actually repeat it at a minimum per how it's done at M-185 (Michigan highway), or the milepost should have been repeated as I did per Interstate 275 (Ohio-Indiana-Kentucky). Imzadi 1979 \rightarrow 22:30, 12 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Gog the Mild: what are your thoughts on this? It seems like the name of the road between each junction is a useful piece of information to have here, and roughly corresponds to the "Location" column called for by MOS:RJL, so I'm not sure the benefit to readers of removing it. As for the loop returning to the first junction, I followed the format used at M60 motorway, which avoids listing the same junction twice in a similar way. Happy to be guided by consensus though on both these points. Cheers — Amakuru (talk) 09:52, 13 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I am inclined to agree with you, but I confess to having skimmed the relevant policy rather than read it in detail. I am hoping to recuse and do a full review of the article, which will give me context to offer an informed opinion. Courtesy ping to Imzadi1979: yeah fair enough, looking forward to that as and when you have the time. I'm away myself over the weekend, so won't be able to get back to this seriously until next week anyway. As for the above, I'm confident we can come to a suitable consensus over it. It's good to use the guidelines where they make sense, which may or may not be the case here, but also WP:5P5 does urge us to use common sense over these things. The only direct reference to stifling economic development seems to relate to Birmingham (where they've since removed much of the inner ring), so don't know if we can directly apply that to Coventry. — Amakuru (talk) 12:29, 6 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The culverting of the Sherbourne at the other end is mentioned, but is the culvert that starts just before the ring road at Spon End, although some culverting of the river in other areas is mentioned starting as early as 1949. The best information I have is from comparing two OS maps from 1946 and 1954 (at SABRE maps), and in the former the Sherbourne is clearly visible between the now defunct Albion Street and Queen Victoria Road, while in the latter it is not depicted at all despite being shown further upstream and downstream. (The exact location of the culvert appears to be obscured by the "Tech Coll" label for the nearby Coventry technical college in the 1954 map unfortunately). But in any case, all this suggests the culvert was build long before the ring road in that area was built, and it isn't really of much relevance. I have added some detail to the line you mention above stating that most of the river had already been culverted in the 50s and 60s. Let me know if anything further is needed. I'll get on to your other points, particularly tightening and copyediting, shortly. Cheers — Amakuru (talk) 12:29, 6 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Some of the route description is a bit complex and difficult to follow, and I know the area. Photos and diagrams with good captions would help. Commons can be a treasure trove for photos but they might not be well described or categorised; perhaps try searching for local landmarks/buildings? @HJ Mitchell: I have had a look at this, and I'm slightly unsure what I need to improve here. The section has an outline map showing the structure and location of the 9 junctions on the right, which was added during the GA review and is intended to provide context for the descriptions given in the section. particularly not for nine separate diagrams. Obviously I could reword the section if that's desirable, with less or more detail depending, but not entirely sure what's needed. Pinging other reviewers @The Rambling Man, Gog the Mild, and ChrisTheDude: in case they also have a suggestion or view on how to improve the prose or imagery in that section? Cheers — Amakuru (talk) 22:15, 6 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I see you have some books referenced in full in footnotes and others using sfns and a bibliography. Is there a reason for that? I feel there's some repetition of the route description in the history and that the word count could be brought down by eliminating some of this. The prose could be tighter in places; there's redundancy in places where the same information could be conveyed with fewer words and the prose would flow better, see this edit for an example. The prose critiques aren't anything too concerning. They're the same sorts of things I pick up in most FACs I review. I'm happy to discuss anything further, or I'm sure I'll be back to support after just a little bit more polish. This article is about the fourth album from alt rock act Jimmy Eat World, released in mid 2001. After nearly becoming a casualty of the major label system following their third album, the band bounced back with their most commercially successful release to date. It was certified platinum in the US, gold in Canada and silver in the UK. Sometime before this, the album's title was changed to Jimmy Eat World following the 9/11 attacks. Its second single "The Middle" was a top five hit in the US, becoming a staple of the pop punk genre, and is the band's signature song. While I initially did some expansion to the article a few years ago, DannyMusicEditor (talk · contribs) did further work on it and took this to GA status in 2016. After I did some expansion in 2021, ahead of the album's 20th anniversary, Danny and I talked about bringing this to FA status. In the interim, we brought Tell All Your Friends to FA earlier this year and have decided to do the same for Bleed American. We had previously taken this to FAC, but the nomination stalled after only receiving one support, so this is the second attempt. FrB.TG (talk) 17:26, 4 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] This article is about a short (about 6 miles in length) industrial railroad in Connecticut with a surprisingly long and storied history. The Branford Steam Railroad started operations in 1903 to carry passengers to a trotting park for horses. Within a decade, it transformed into an industrial shortline hauling trap rock from the company has hauled trap rock from the company has have been have same quarry since 1914 to today, and plans are that it will continue this task for at least the next 200 years. The "Steam Railroad" has not used steam locomotives since 1960, but the seemingly absurd name is necessary since the Branford Electric Railway also exists to this day as a museum preserving streetcars. I completely rewrote this article in October 2021, and have made a few further improvements since then. Following the promotion of my first FA last month, I would like to see this little known railroad become a featured article as well. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 17:26, 4 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Comment: Performing source spot-check at FAC's talk page, for this article version. CactiStaccingCrane (talk) 04:24, 6 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Round-up: Spotted some cases of original synthesis, but nothing too serious. Please give page numbers to newspaper source, as finding the passage can be pretty difficult without it. Will check one or two more frequently cited source later. CactiStaccingCrane (talk) 04:48, 6 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Support from Gog the Mild Recusing to review. What does "exchanges freight" mean? Ah, that's one of the sentences I didn't rewrite when I redid the article last year. This is referring to Interchange (freight rail), where rail cars are transferred from one railroad company to another for continued transport. BSRR rail cars are transferred to the Providence and Worcester Railroad which runs dedicated trains to Fresh Pond Junction near New York City. At the docks, the BSRR transfers much of the trap rock from the quarry to barges. I have revised the article to state this information. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 22:25, 5 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] It seems a little strange that the lead states neither the length nor the gauge of the railway. It may also be helpful to overtly state that it is still running. I can specify standard gauge, it's usually assumed. I note that AirTrain JFK, a FA, does not mention the gauge in the lead, likely for this reason. The gauge is listed in the infobox. I have added the length to the lead section. That the line is still running is established by the use of "is" rather than "was" and the lead being in present tense. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 22:03, 5 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The infobox should only contain information already in the main article. It states that the track is standard gauge and gives the measurements for this, but I can't see this in the article. Have I read past it? To me, this is akin to saying in every FA on a railroad or rail line I can find does things the same way I have here. Consider the featured articles City and South London Railway, Eastern Suburbs & Illawarra Line, South Lake Union Streetcar, MAX Orange Line, MAX Red Line, Brill Transit), Manila Light Rail Transit System, Downtown Seattle Transit Tunnel, and Great North of Scotland Railway, all of which follow the same practice as I have here. To explicitly state the gauge in the article's prose would be going against best practice for articles on railroads, and indeed you often won't really find sources explicitly stating the line is standard gauge because all commercial railroads in the United States and Canada are standard gauge. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 13:50, 24 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] You give the precise dimensions of the track in the infobox. This is not something you can expect a normal reader to know, it is not BLUESKY. It needs to be in the article. So you think all of those FAs are wrong then? It's standard gauge. Every single common carrier railroad in the U.S. is standard gauge. Again, I unfortunately cannot give you a source that says "the Branford Steam Railroad in the U.S., the tracks are standard gauge. I've checked through all the sources on the company's founding and construction and opening, and none of them mention the gauge. If I put the gauge in the body, then I'd, technically speaking, be violating the FA criteria for it not having a citation. I don't know what you want me to do here. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 23:01, 24 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] There is nothing technical about it. Leaving aside the fact that there should be nothing in the infobox that isn't in the article, you are telling me that "4 ft 8+1/2 in (1,435 mm) standard gauge" is in the article because you assume that this is the case. It's a nice article and I really don't want to oppose so please find a way round this OR. If "all commercial railroads in the United States and Canada are standard gauge" then source that and I'm happy. Gog the Mild (talk) 19:15, 29 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Butting in a bit - I have this on my watchlist intending to review but have just been lazy about it. This source covers the standardization across North America, which happened during the 1800s and has remained consistent ever since. Per Track gauge in the United States, all commercial railroads in the US converted to standard gauge following the Pacific Railroad Acts of the 1860s, and per Track gauge in Canada and the report "The Rise and Fall of the Provincial Gauge" (not linked because the URL is like forty miles long, but first result on Google), basically every Canadian railway had converted by 1881. Given the level of standardization, I have to agree with TAOT here that detailing the dimensions of the gauge is unnecessary and I think calling it original research is unfair. APMC (talk) 19:37, 29 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] As PMC (talk) prerogative, but I'd be seriously disappointed in you. I'm not going to remove the gauge information, that only makes the article worse for the reader. Hell, I'll say I'm invoking WP:IAR here - it's blatantly obvious what the gauge of the line is, and opposing over me not having a source that explicitly states the gauge, even when it's extremely obvious, that only makes the article worse for the reader. seems spurious to me. In my view, there's a clear WP:EDITCONSENSUS that gauge information doesn't need to be cited when the railroad in question is in a country that has one gauge near universally, based on what I've listed previously. But again, you're well within your rights to oppose if that's how you feel about the situation. I believe I have done my best to respond to and address your concerns, even when I've personally disagreed with them. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 01:08, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Please drop the stick, AGF and work with me here. The information in question is not the slightest bit obvious to me, nor I am sure to the vast majority of readers. You can't have information stated as fact in an FA which is not cited. PMC seems to have supplied sources which will address my concern - note my comment in my last post "If "all commercial railroads in the United States and Canada are standard gauge" then source that and I'm happy." And, frankly, I refuse to believe that there is no HQ RS in existence which gives the dimensions of US standard gauge - are you telling me that that is the case? Gog the Mild (talk) 12:30, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Gog, I'm not sure what you mean with your last sentence. The BSRR was chartered first, on March 19, 1903. The Damascus Railroad, a separate company, was chartered on July 18, 1905. Fisk was heavily involved with both companies, and in 1909 the Damascus Railroad came under the control of the Branford Steam Railroad. There was also a law on the books in Connecticut (for all I know, it might still be in effect) prohibiting any crossings between steam railroads, for safety reasons. Some initial thoughts: Reply[reply] Prose/General: I went through and performed some line edits, mostly focusing on reducing some redundancies and improving flow. One part I found myself wondering that isn't addressed by the article—why was there a change in the Branford railroad's use, and why did he create two separate railroads and then sell one to the other? It's a matter of charters. The Branford Steam Railroad was chartered to be built on a certain route and carry certain traffic. Strictly speaking, Fisk could have sought to modify the BSRR's charter to get authorization to extend the line instead of chartering a new company; as far as I can tell the reason he chose the latter is lost to history. The change in use is because of the increased demand for Connecticut traprock, and the region. The passenger service was a short-lived thing, it ended within a decade after the BSRR's founding. I'm hoping to ography of Fisk at some point which might fill in some of these gaps. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 23:29, 27 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Agree with the above that stuff not in the article body definitely needs to be referenced in the infobox; railroad gauges are not always the same and are otherwise not general knowled think BLUESKY applies. It's oddly framed so that the edge of a parking lot is super-prominent, and you barely see the tracks themselves. What I have to work with is here: [75]. There aren't really any great photos of the railroad that are freely licensed, but if something in the Commons cat strikes you as a better choice I'm all ears. If we wanted a photo of a BSRR train, I'd have to go take a photo of the railroad myself, which isn't easy as I now live in Rhode Island, not Connecticut. Regarding ownership, what I've pieced together is that Ashland purchased NHTRC in 1968, purchased NHTRC in 1968, purchased NHTRC in 1972, and then formed "NHTR Tomasso" as a combination of the two companies. Thomas Tilling Ltd. purchased Ashland's operations in 1984. CHR bought Tilcon (renamed from Angelo Tomasso in 1990) in 1996, and is the current owner of Tilcon and by extension the BSRR. Honestly since a few references use his full name (such as ref 18) I'm not sure this is even needed. Yeah, that's something which was present before I started working on the article. Agree it's not really necessary, removed. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 18:25, 4 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply]. Any utility in the photos of the driving park and some random train from here, or the photos here? I only ask since the first half of the article is a bit bare, photo-wise. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 18:25, 4 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Damascus Railroad & Expansion Why is Damascus Railroad to horsecar and linked it in-text since it's a curiosity worth clicking on. Railroad bolded here? In my head the reason I bolded it was because, technically, this article is about both the Branford Steam Railroad and the Damascus Railroad. The latter is a subtopic of the former. I don't feel strongly about this and can remove it if you'd believe it would be better that way. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 22:11, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] It's just odd to have it bolded in the lead. APMC (talk) 17:39, 12 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] It is now bold in the lead. A mustache-twirling captain of industry marshalling a small army of dudes to fuck over another captain of industry, suits flying back and forth, an entire police force getting involved... it's fun. Yeah, it was quite something to read about when I was doing research. Though it's still quite silly. And while the Shore Line Electric Railway has been gone for a very long time, the Branford Steam Railroad persists doing the exact same thing today as it did 100 years ago. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 19:24, 8 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] New Haven By 1917, Fisk had divested his share of the quarry...: was NHTRC operating the BSRR at that time? Did he also divest his interest in the railroad? (This may be answered later, idk) This is an area that's somewhat unclear, when exactly the transition in ownership happened. I have not located an exact source documenting Fisk leaving the company, and the Steamtown ref says as much, that this is only inferred by him eventually no longer being listed as involved with the company. I did find that his name came up under a new electric railroad at roughly the same time his name disappeared from the BSRR, so added that to the article at the urging of the reviewer back when this article was at GAN. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 19:24, 8 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I see the updates to the article today! Nice find. ♦ PMC ♦ (talk) 18:49, 12 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I noticed that although the lead mentions it, the article doesn't never explicitly says the NHTRC started operating the railroad was and is its own company, but today it's a subsidiary of Tilcon, and is its own company, but today it's a subsidiary of Tilcon, and is its own company. it was at some point a NHTRC subsidiary. Some of these details we may never get concrete answers for. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 18:25, 4 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The lead explicitly says "New Haven Trap Rock Company, which became operator of both the quarry and the Branford Steam Railroad". Even if we can't be specific with dates etc in the body due to source limitations, we should still echo the lead in saying that the Trap Rock company started operating the railroad at some point. PMC (talk) 18:49, 12 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Per above, this has been resolved by way of those changes. out Fisk actually sold the railroad and quarry in 1914, and the New Haven Trap Rock Company became the owner. This is now specified in both, but that's what the sources say. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 18:51, 12 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Further to this, if the NHTRC is operating the BSRR, is the BSRR properly a customer, or is it more like a subsidiary? I guess it's kind of semantics here. I use the term customer' in this sense is of course the quarry. But yes, at this point the BSRR was indeed a subsidiary of the NHTRC. Trainsandotherthings (talk) 19:24, 8 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I wasn't sure if it was a railroad-specific jargony usage of customer. I see what you mean though. I have received and seen the following note in the FAC space a fair bit. I would avoid the sentence structure "with X verb-ing" as I have been told that is not appropriate for FA writing. I'd look throughout the article for any other instances of this and revise where necessary. Fixed a couple of these I think. I have a few comments for this part, while reviewing the video game, Jack DeVries said that the series was not as much of a rip-off criticism would benefit from further expansion because it seems more like a brief mention at the moment. I am not sure of the value of this sentence, The show was also compared to Bewitched. It does not really convey that much information so I'd either remove it or go into more detail. I've tried to clarify both of the above and remove the mention of the vide game as it might confuse things. I hate to be this person, but what makes Plugged In a high-quality source? I also found it a little jarring to have a single, more religious citation used in the article. I would suggest the religious citation used in the article. sources/Perennial sources list. SatDis (talk) 14:18, 13 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Source review Footnote numbers refer to this version. See this discussion re the reliability of IB Times, which you use in a couple of places. The New York Post is also a generally unreliable source. Mashable is also a dubious source, but I think you need to replace it anyway as you have it citing a release was planned for that date. Releases can get delayed, after all. I'm also concerned about PopSugar -- this makes it sound as if it accepts pieces by non-staff writers, and searching the RS noticeboard comes up with negative opinions. I see some inconsistencies in the cite formatting. For example, [96] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has both the website and publisher parameters, [68] has neither, [29] has neither, [29] has neither, [20] has neith when to use each parameter is fine, but I can't see what your rule might be here. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 10:58, 28 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Mike Christie: Thank you, I will address these within the next few days. SatDis (talk) 11:22, 28 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Mike Christie: I have removed sources from New York Post (and a lot of info that went with it), Mashable, PopSugar and IBT (one was an interview with the show's creator). I have removed [68], [76] and [77] as they are unreliable sources. [29] has been fixed: each source should have a website and publisher, if it doesn't, it means I am unsure as to who the publisher is or there is none. I also only wikilink the first appearance of each source. SatDis (talk) 03:26, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Another pass through; here are some more questions. More reliable source questions: what makes the following sites reliable? MarkRobinsonWrites.com -- looks like a blog. Isn't a blog acceptable in the context of a reviewer? Can remove if needed. You have cite web citations that have no website/work parameter; for example the Nickelodeon Kids' Choice Awards, the TV Tonight awards, the Artios aw those three sources (MarkRobinsonWrites.com, TVshowsonDVD.com and Imagen.org) but just thought I'd let you know their purpose. SatDis (talk) 10:42, 1 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I will look at the formatting again in a moment, but re the reliability, it's not always necessary to remove a source that is guestioned. If you believe that the source is reliable, you can make the case -- often I will ask because I'm unfamiliar with the source and can't find evidence of reliability; if you can supply that evidence of relia established subject-matter expert, whose work in the relevant field has previously been published by reliable, independent publications". Is he a well-known reviewer with other publications who covers this genre? If so it might be OK to use this source. For TVshowsonDVD, those look like press releases to me, but is TVshowsonDVD a reliable source for reproducing them? If you can show the site was owned by a corporate entity with editorial control that would probably be enough; or if you can find evidence that it is treated as a reliable source by other sources that are themselves reliable. of the woman who founded it; and anyone can create a website and start handing out awards. Are the awards treated as significant by other media sources? Is there an industry group that supports the site? I suspect this probably is a reliable source but I couldn't find proof. We have an article on the awards, but again it only talks about Helen Hernandez as the founder. Perhaps one of the sources at that article will provide enough background to prove it's reliable. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 12:54, 1 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Re the formatting, I see there are still some missing publishers -- e.g. the Kid's Choice Awards, TVShowsOnDVD, WEBN-TV, Mark Robinson, and there are still missing work/website parameters: Young Artist awards, Imagen Awards, the Emmys, Australian Nickelodeon. Mike Christie: Fixed all of the above mentioned. TV Tonight is the website and there is no publisher; same for Mark Robinson. Kids' Choice Awards is the website and I have listed Nickelodeon as the publisher. SatDis (talk) 09:31, 2 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] For Mark Robinson, if you read his bio here [78], it appears he has authored several books on TV and is a featured writer for reliable websites such as Playbill. I think this may qualify as evidence. I can see that TVShowsonDVD was owned by CBS Interactive and incorporated into TV Guide until the website shut down. After digging into Imagen, I found an article from The Hollywood Reporter (here [79]) which seems to support the awards. It appears here [80] to be a legitimate awards ceremony. Variety covered the 2021 awards here [81]. Please let me know if I can make any further changes. Thank you. SatDis (talk) 09:31, 2 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I'm OK with Mark Robinson and Imagen based on what you found. For TVShowsonDVD, this page makes it seem a one man operation in 2011, which is when your cites date from. What did you find that convinced you it was owned by CBS? Mike Christie (talk contribs - library) 10:34, 2 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Mike Christie: Ah, I see. This source [82] is from 2013 which means the 2011 source sources? SatDis (talk) 11:28, 2 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Proving it's reliable after 2011 certainly doesn't help, though I don't see how you make the connection even in that article -- was TVShowsonDVD owned by TVGN? If you want to keep it we would need evidence that it was reliable in 2011. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 11:52, 2 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Mike Christie : All I could find was this post about integration with TV Guide here [83]. If this isn't enough for reliability, I think I will remove the sources as I'm not sure what else to look for. Thanks. SatDis (talk) 21:39, 2 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I would suggest removing it unless we can come up with better proof. Once you've done that I'll go back over the article and check for formatting consistency again, and then check links. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 21:50, 3 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Going through the links and checking reliability for sites I haven't looked at yet. What makes the following reliable sources? TV by the Numbers -- looks like it's a hobby site run by two friends, per this page. Removed. Futon Critic -- looks like a personal site again, though it seems the owner may be a professional in the field? Links look good, and other than the items above I see no more issues with reliability or formatting. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 12:44, 1 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] More comments: "and gave rise to the development of": a little long-winded. How about "Tie-ins included merchandise..."? Done. "when not running the family business with his wife, Theresa, a sandwich shop designed to look like a subway station, on the ground level of their apartment building": needs rewording; as written it's too easy to read this as saying that Theresa is a sandwich shop. Fixed. "Heidi Denzel de Tirado wrote in a journal article": how it was published is less important than what de Tirado's background is. I would suggest making this "Academic [or whatever the right description is] Heidi Denzel de Tirado argued that". Fixed. "and while they celebrate traditions such as having a guinceañera, their culture is not prominently featured in most episodes": suggest "but their culture is not prominently featured in most episodes, with occasional exceptions such as Alex's quinceañera". Used this. "Denzel de Tirado analyzed that the cultural representation is conservative as it takes place within a surreal, magical setting": "analyzed" is not the right verb; it takes a direct object. However I don't understand the point she's making. Why would the setting mean that the cultural representation is conservative? Upon revisiting this, I don't believe it is a strong point and have removed it. "The series' setting is inspired by, it's actually set there, isn't it? Yes The source also states it is a version of that setting, so I have changed to "the series is set in a fictionalized version of Waverly Place" "Disney executives discovered Selena Gomez at an open casting call in Austin, Texas, at age twelve": this makes it sounds as though she had no prior acting experience, but in fact her first TV appearance was at age ten. I have reworded to make it appear more like she was noticed by Disney at this point in her career. Can we clarify the timeline at the end of the "Development" section? You use TVTickets.com as a source for Gomez being attached to the show in February. This interview was published in July but took place that February, and says shooting was about to start in two weeks. But in March the names were still not settled on? It's hard to believe they could shoot much footage without finalizing the names. Is there anything more concrete about the shooting schedule? She appeared in several Hannah Montana episodes, not just one, and the source you cite doesn't say it was after she was cast in Waverly Place -- the air date (July 2007) of the first episode was certainly after she was cast, but it was probably shot before the EW interview both mention filming commencing in February. Okay. Yes, the TV Tickets source and EW interview both mention filming commencing in February so I think that is a given. It is possible that the March 2007 Investor newsletter hadn't been updated with the correct names. As the series didn't air until October, that's over six months of filming, so it is possible that elements were reworked (or the February filming was just a pilot with different names). As for Hannah Montana, I have moved the sentence and reworded so that it fits in with the timeline and can be supported by the source. "Her affiliation with the network led to the formation of the band Selena Gomez & the Scene who Disney signed to their label, Hollywood Records, and subsequently, a prominent solo music career." Why would the affiliation lead to the formation of the band? Do you mean that because she was working with Disney, Disney suggested that she form a band which they could then sign to their label? Absolutely, it was standard for Disney to sign their actors to their label. But I understand the source doesn't say this, so I have reworded. Just checking: Bailee Madison would have been sixteen? I don't doubt the actress played the role, but just wanted to check that she was really meant to be the same age as Jake's character, as the article implies. You are correct, I have changed the sentence to "transformed into a younger female". "Special effects were typically used in the series to create the magic spells": this tells us almost nothing except that they didn't use real magic. If we can't be more specific I would cut this. Removed. Any reason you mention the renewals for the second? I cannot find any source for the second? I cannot find any source for the second? I cannot find any source for the second? race": this is sourced to "my agent called and said, "They want to buy that pilot you pitched them. Something about your dad and family. You've got to call them back.' It was very lucky." The show, revolving around a mixed-race family much like Murrieta's, ran for one season on the WB. When he took on executive-producing, it was called "The Amazing O'Malleys." Murrieta renamed them the Russos and made the family — two brothers and a sister with wizardly powers — mixed race as well." This doesn't support what you have in the article; yes, he was the one who changed the family to be mixed-race, but it doesn't support what you have a just a sister with wizardly powers — mixed race as well." because he thought it worked for the previous show he wrote. Understood, have reworded. "the contentious relationships between the siblings was reminiscent": this is a direct quote from the source; this needs to be attributed or paraphrased. Reworded. I'd like to read the Ackerman article, which you cite quite a bit, but I only have access to a couple of pages on Google Books. Can you send me the whole article, or link to somewhere I can read it? See below. "The series depicts stories about family, friends and growing up": why does this belong in the writing section? It seems to be a restatement of what's been said earlier in the article. Removed. "Greenwald explained that since the unaired pilot, the brother-sister dynamic was the heart of the show; Murrieta explained he enjoyed allowing the characters to age, referencing Justin graduating from high school." I'm not sure why these two sentences are connected; they seem unrelated. I also don't understand what Greenwald is saying -- the brother-sister dynamic was also in the unaired pilot? This whole section seems a bit like factoids strung together. I know that unfortunately that's sometimes all you have to work with, but it's a bit too fragmented at the moment. I have removed the connection and disregarded the second "factoid" (you are right), and clarified Greenwald's comment. I said above I would not oppose based on the critical reception section, and I'll try to stick to that, but I do think it can still be improved. For example, "has received positive reviews for its use of an ensemble cast" seems odd -- some reviewer actually said "it's a good show because it has an ensemble cast", or words to that effect? Have changed to "for its actors" "delivery of humor" also seems an unnatural phrase -- does the reviews for its actors? Yes. I have changed to "for its actors" "delivery of humor" also seems an unnatural phrase -- does the review just mean they were good comic actors? Yes. I have changed to "for its actors" "delivery of humor" also seems an unnatural phrase -- does the review just mean they were good comic actors? Yes. I have changed to "for its actors" "delivery of humor" also seems an unnatural phrase -- does the review just mean they were good comic actors? Yes. I have changed to "for its actors" actors and their comedic skills" "McNamara believed that Justin and Max did not serve as comic relief, but appear as often as Alex does": I understand what you're getting it, but saying a reviewer "believes" that an actor appears as often as the star isn't a good way to argue that they are "not just comic relief", but presumably costars in McNamara's eyes. In that case, I've removed the "but appear as often as Alex does" fragment. "Reviewers" criticized the characters in the series": this could be phrased less generally -- it sounds as though every character came in for general criticism. Have reworded to "Some characters were criticized by reviewers" "Alex was viewed as an ineffective role model because of her rebellious nature": "ineffective" implies the intention is for her to be a role model, but she (or the script) is failing; is that really what is meant? Yes, I believe so - the expectation with a Disney series aimed at children is that the protagonist will be a responsible role model. However, I see what you're saying about the word "ineffective" (of a desired purpose) - so I have reworded to "Paul Asay of Plugged In did not view Alex as a role model because of her rebellious nature" - this is now attributed to that specific reviewer. "the role of the parents was analyzed as them both being too foolish": this is clumsy and needs rephrasing. Reworded. 'Paul Asay of Plugged In referred to the program's depiction of angels as "spiritually misleading": I think for context we might say that Plugged In is a Christian site; the comment would seem odd to someone who didn't know that. I have added, though it now appears earlier in the paragraph. Oppose. Overall I think there's some work to do to get this to FAC standards. I'm a bit concerned that the Ackerman article has not been used as much as it might be; a 12-page academic article about the show ought to yield more than supporting citations for the basic themes and a sentence or two more, but I'm not opposing over that since I have not yet read it. The "Writing and filming" and "Critical reception" sections are the weakest, both for the writing and the sense they give of having been assembled from fragments, but some of the earlier sections are weak in spots as well. I am also concerned that a spot-check might be in order -- I've pointed out two places above where the sources that's a high percentage. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 23:24, 10 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Hi @Mike Christie: I have addressed all of the above and am prepared to make any further changes on Google Books, but still able to use heavily for the amount. As it is not freely licensed on the internet, I don't think it can be used any further. As you have said, some of the sections have been assembled from fragments due to a lack of sources - in terms of the "Writing and filming" section, if it currently isn't acceptable, I believe most of that section can be combined elsewhere and ultimately removed. I am happy to work through any other sections. Thank you. SatDis (talk) 10:26, 13 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Thanks for addressing the points above. I am going to leave my oppose in place, I'm afraid. For one thing I would like another reviewer to go through and support before I revisit, to get a second opinion on whether the issues have been addressed. I'm also concerned that the article was written without reference to Ackerman's paper. It's OK in some cases to not review a source -- even in specialized areas like Anglo-Saxon history there can be hundreds or thousands of articles about an obscure topic, and nominators are expected to know the field well enough to be able to identify the important sources. Here there's only one academic source that focuses specifically on the topic, and I think without consulting it we can't say that the article is comprehensive, which is an FA requirement. I recommend that you withdraw the nomination and request the paper at WP:RX. It might not add much to the article, but we won't know that till you've read it. I don't think this is the sort of work that should be done at FAC. SatDis (talk) 02:09, 14 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The Yugoslav acquisition of this class of two British-made submarines in the late 1920s marked the beginning of the junction of the second se Yugoslav submarine service, something that has been celebrated as recently as 2013 in the Yugoslav successor state of Montenegro. The subs were built using parts assembled for British L-class subs that were cancelled with the end of World War I. They had an uncommon offensive set-up, with six bow-mounted torpedo tubes and two deck guns. When they were acquired, they sported the largest guns in the Yugoslav Royal Navy. One was captured by the Italians during the April 1941 Axis invasion and was used for training purposes until returned to the navy-in-exile towards the end of the war. Transferred to the new navy of post-war socialist Yugoslavia, it served a static classroom until it was disposed of in the mid-50s. This article passed Milhist A-Class years ago, and has recently been updated with a comprehensive new source. The two individual sub articles are FAs, so the promotion of this article will mean all articles in the featured topic will be also be featured. Have at it. Just a few minor queries Dudley Miles (talk) 07:56, 3 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Comments from The ed17 Mostly minor comments and questions for ya, Peacemaker67. This isn't a dealbreaker, but: the lead isn't the easiest thing to read, in part because it's rather stuffed with information. I've made a couple edits to simplify things, and you might consider going through it with a fine-tooth comb to remove information that isn't critical to a reader's overall understanding of the submarines. "were manufactured in six parts each, linked into a single cylinder by those screws? "Between 1933 and 1934 ..." - was this a Nebojša that it began sinking bow-first? "When diving on another occasion, Hrabri listed sharply to starboard and the bulwark around the bridge was damaged by waves." - was this also during the sea trials? The wording here suggests that it was not. "A few days before the invasion commenced, Nebojša and Osvetnik had conducted night patrols, mainly on the surface, on rotation with Hrabri and Smeli." - read literally in my mind, this wording would suggest there were patrols on multiple alternating nights? Perhaps the sentence should read something like this: "Starting X days before the invasion, the Yugoslav Navy deployed two submarines each night to patrol the coastline, primarily on the surface. They deployed Nebojša and Osvetnik together, and rotated them on each succeeding night with Hrabri and Smeli." "The transfer of the former German Type VII U-boat U-570 - HMS Graph - was considered, ... - who considered this? The Royal Navy, government, otherwise? "She remained unable to dive and was used as a moored classroom or hulk." - emphasis mine. Did the "extensive overhaul and repairs" in Port Said still not allow the submarine to dive in the last couple years of the war? It seems unlikely that it would have been sent to Malta without that capability. Gurl.com was an influential part of 1990s Internet culture as one of the first online media and communities aimed at young girls. It was mostly known for being a peer resource for teen advice, containing honest discussions about sexuality, body positivity, and adolescence, back when female-oriented media, such as magazines, hardly addressed those issues. In addition, Gurl.com is also credited for Internet activity in girls from generation Y and has been a point of reference in academia regarding behavior of teenage girls on the Internet in the 2000s, such as the topics they discussed and the websites they would create. I started and brought this article to Good status in the past year. Particularly where Internet culture and technology is involved, media and communities aimed at women don't get discussed that often, especially since now most people have moved towards social media. lullabying (talk) 19:36, 26 June 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Image review Suggest adding alt text File:Gurl 2011 logo.png: FUR is incomplete - since the article includes two non-free logos there needs to be strong justification. I'll try to get more comments on this. lullabying (talk) 20:58, 23 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Comments from Mike Christie "as the Internet lacked such communities in the 1990s": This is said in Wikipedia's voice, which means we would need good sourcing for it. It may well be true but I think the intention is to say that this was the opinion of the three women, so perhaps this should read "as they felt the Internet lacked such communities in the 1990s" or something similar. 'The name of the website combined the "q" with the acronym "URL." I'm not sure what we are trying to communicate with this sentence. The website name is a pun that refers to both "URL" and "girl"; I think you've phrased it this way because all readers will understand the "girl" but some might not know the "URL" acronym. I can't see the source you're using, but if it will support it I'd suggest phrasing it like this: 'The name of the website combined "girl" with the internet acronym [or just acronym] "URL".' The "G" at the start isn't the point. "Odes, Drill, and McDonald continued to work on the website with Delia's": The sources may not specify, but do we know if they were taken on as employees of Delia's, or if Gurl.com continued to exist as a corporate entity, as a subsidiary, with the three women continuing to work for it? "Gurl.com was included as property in Delia's online subsidiary, iTurf, in an attempt to launch an e-commerce market targeting Generation Y": what's the significance of "as property"? Was iTurf a subsidiary, iTurf, in an attempt to launch an e-commerce market targeting Generation Y": what's the significance of "as property"? Was iTurf a subsidiary, iTurf, in an attempt to launch an e-commerce market targeting Generation Y": what's the significance of "as property"? Was iTurf a subsidiary, iTurf, in an attempt to launch and e-commerce market targeting Generation Y company that owned Gurl.com? Or was Gurl.com? Or was Gurl.com? Or was Gurl.com? Or was Gurl.com? This, which is a bit of a surprise as the third was apparently up by January 1997 -- see here. (And any idea why they were hosted at NYU? Not important if the sources don't cover it; hosting was a bit Wild-West-ish back then.) No coverage on Gurl.com as a zine can be found as far as I can see, though it was part of online zine culture aimed at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think the content section needs at girls. lullabying (talk) 18:51, 7 August 20:52, 7 August 20:52, 7 August 20:52, 7 August 20:52, 7 Augu few dates. For example, from checking a few archive.org pages, it appears the presentation as a zine lasted twenty-two years, and changed dramatically in that time, but the Content section speaks about the zine topics, features, games, and comics without making it clear what time period these apply to. Gurlmail.com and Gurlpages.com are given a date range, which is what I'm looking for. The sources may not let you be very specific, but we should convey whatever we can. Unfortunately digging through archive.org would be primary research so we can't do that. There isn't a specific date range found for the content in the sources. lullabying (talk) 19:05, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Struck. I'll read through again and see if I can think of a way to address this. It's a pity the sources are so unspecific because the site changed a lot in those 22 years. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 22:04, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] "While Gurl.com could be accessed without an account, registration was required in order to submit content and participate in the chat room and message board, enforced in order to protect its community": The last clause is a bit disconnected from the rest of the sentence. And if the source permits, can we be less vague than "protect"? E.g. from harassment, trolls, online predators? 'Early game content satirized beauty standards, such as "Hairy Gurl." Is "Hairy Gurl." Is "Hairy Gurl." Is "Hairy Gurl." Is that really the case? "some critics advised the book should be read by older audiences": surely what they meant is that it was not suitable for younger readers, or that it should not be read by younger readers, not that it should be read by older readers? The critical reception section; please review. lullabying (talk) 22:13, 5 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I think that's a big improvement. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 10:54, 6 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] "In 2005, scholar Sharon Mazzarella noted that Gurl.com was among the websites that helped girls be creative and empowered, though it was later overshadowed by moral panic surrounding their vulnerability online": what was overshadowed? As written it says that Gurl.com was overshadowed, but I think Mazzarella is probably saying something more general about how websites that encourage girls to interact online were affected by the moral panic, and not talking only about Gurl.com. Done I reworded the section; please review. lullabying (talk) 22:13, 5 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] That's clearer. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 10:51, 6 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] "creating a paradox on constructed norms and downplaying individual sexual agency": I think this is a little too academic in its phrasing. Done I reworded it. lullabying (talk) 19:05, 7 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] "It was named as one of the websites associated with the growth of websites owned by teenage girls, creating a potential advertising market worth $150 billion USD in 2000": I don't follow this. It was never owned by teenage girls, was it? "Duncan and Leander discovered that Gurl.com created spaces of both "resistance and conformity", as people who had websites on Gurlpages both expressed themselves in creative writing yet also listed personal information identifying their demographics and consumer habits": I think "discovered" is the wrong verb; it makes it sound as if their analysis is undoubtedly correct. Suggest rephrasing to use a verb like "described" or "considered". That's it for a first pass. Mike Christie (talk - contribs library) 12:12, 25 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Thanks for your comments. I've made a few grammatical edits based on your suggestion and will get back to you on the parts with clarification and rewording. lullabying (talk) 03:23, 27 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] OK. I've struck the points I see you've addressed so far. Mike Christie (talk - contribs library) 03:51, 27 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Regarding this point: "It was never owned by teenage girls, was it?" This is referring to the fact that Gurl.com's zine (before it became an online community), the number of issues were not documented. lullabying (talk) 19:55, 27 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Regarding the name of the website: I changed it according to your suggestions but the originated from the letter "g" with the acronym "URL." lullabying (talk) 20:01, 27 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I've struck a couple more above. I think "mentioned" still isn't right -- a verb like "mention", "note", or "discover" implies that what follows is undoubtedly true. I think we need a verb that makes it clear this is the organization of the critical reception section. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 10:54, 28 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I change it back if it's not clear enough. I reworded Mazzarella's statement about the vulnerability of girls online and the source states that the moral panic is mostly surrounding how the youth were subsceptible to being exposed to harmful messages in online content. I will get to the other stuff once I review the sources. lullabying (talk) 03:15, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Re: "topics such as female sexuality, which was often overlooked in traditional media aimed at teenagers in the 1990s": This is sourced to The Cut, which I don't think is good enough to have this in Wikipedia's voice. As above I suggest either finding another source for "was often overlooked", or changing this to assign it as an opinion. I reworded this. lullabying (talk) 03:25, 30 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Re The Cut, I'm not sure the new version really works either. The problem for me is that The Cut is just not a very good source for the assertion; putting the source in the article as you've done eliminates the issue of a general statement that is cited to a weak source, but now we have a statement in the article that is not very useful, because we're explicitly saying "a poor source said this" and a reader is going to wonder why we bother to mention it. I would have thought that the statement itself is accurate and could be sourced to something more authoritative. I think the wording of the sentence about Mazzarella is improved, but it's still not clear what "it" refers to in "it was later overshadowed". Does Mazzarella is improved, but it's still not clear what "it" refers to in "it was later overshadowed". later overshadowed" to remove the ambiguity. If Mazzarella means that the positive effects of "websites that helped girls be creative and empowered" were later overshadowed. I would make it something like "the positive effects of these websites that helped girls be creative and empowered" were later overshadowed. I would make it something like "the positive effects of these websites that helped girls be creative and empowered" were later overshadowed. I would make it something like "the positive effects of these websites that helped girls be creative and empowered" were later overshadowed. you're aware, but at FAC it's OK to intersperse your answers to reviewers' comments, replying to each bullet point with an indented comment. You can see this in other FACs at WP:FAC. You don't have to do it that way -- replying at the bottom as you are doing here is OK, and some prefer to do that -- but I didn't know if you were aware that it was an option. Some people prefer to do it that way because it makes it easier to see which points have been responded to and which are still outstanding. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 13:43, 31 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I've struck a few more points based on the most recent changes. That's taken care of the main issues that were preventing me from supporting. Do you have any comments on the unstruck points above? In some cases there may be no change you can make to the article, since I'm asking whether the sources give more information about something, and they may not. (t · c) buidhe 21:11, 24 June 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Buidhe 21:11, 24 June the source has a reputation for fact checking or accuracy. Just existing and calling oneself a news website is not enough to count as a RS; many such sources are rated non-reliable by the Wikipedia community. High quality means to me that the source has a strong reputation for factchecking and accuracy, which would be a marginally reliable source. An example of a high-quality RS would be a peer-reviewed article published by researchers in their area of expertise. (t · c) buidhe 23:13, 24 June 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I'd concur with much of that. But even if we grant that the burden of showing "high quality" is on the nominators, it's answered for the ones that the Korean wiki project has found to be reliable, since they're probably in a better position to assess than we are. I'd go so far as to say that where there is such an assessment, the burden would be to show unreliability or bias. As a practical matter, these are the sort of things that can't be definitively settled (since finding sources saying a site has a strong reputation we can garner.--Wehwalt (talk) 14:03, 25 June 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Wehwalt's comment appears to be related to the standard approach taken by Wikipedia for reliable sources which is either to green light them as reliable, or to red light them as unreliable; there is a middle area also used by Wikipedia policy to identify 'use only if editors are the authors, and to exclude contributors who are not editors at the magazine in question. To be very blunt, I feel that the section is too promotional, with phrases such as the fandom regularly embraces activism on charitable causes and socio-political issues, charitable causes but completely rewritten in order to comply with neutrality and somewhat shorten to comply our due proportions policy. Otherwise, great work on BTS, and I'm happy to struck my oppose once my concern is addressed. CactiStaccingCrane (talk) 03:58, 1 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I"ve cut some. But the fandom is not puffing, this part of the article is very heavily supported by scholarly sources. I've been involved in music fandom in my time, and the fans' aspirations were heavily focused on the music and on the band members. This is different. To cite from the scholarly sources, Chang and Park, p. 268, "On the whole, we find that the fandoms, constituted through the digital intimacies of cyberspace, gradually proceed from the realm of personal relations and individual experience to an expanding sympathy with social, and even political, issues that organically connect to the experiences of BTS and ARMY members. A moving target, as this living phenomenon has extended in real time to the global stage, it has started to reveal its cultural and social complexity and potential to both reflect and drive social change." Or Lee and Kao, p. 81: "BTS ARMY is extremely well-organized and was able to help motivate BTS to issue a statement and donate funds. In fact, the effectiveness of the fandom has been repeatedly demonstrated in their ardent support of BTS, but in this situation they prompted BTS to act on a political issue. Most recently, the rise of anti-Asian hate crimes and negative bias incidents due to COVID-19 in the U.S. and elsewhere has led to the hashtag #stopasianhate and #stopAAPIhate. In March 2021, BTS released a statement utilizing the above hashtags to condemn racism against Asian Americans, and stated that they had also experienced racism as Asians when traveling outside of Korea. Their statements resonated with fans across the world and with Asian Americans, as well as Asians in other Western countries. The political power of the BTS ARMY is important for K-pop itself because it shows the possible trajectory of K-pop as a global cultural phenomenon." It isn't puffing, it's a thing.--Wehwalt (talk) 13:07, 1 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] CactiStaccingCrane, I'd be grateful if you'd have another look at this and perhaps review the sources we used, most of which are online.--Wehwalt (talk) 19:34, 1 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Struck my oppose. Well done, ErnestKrause, Wehwalt, and Btspurplegalaxy! --TheSandDoctor Talk 02:29, 4 July 2022 y] Comments from Heartfox In August 2014, BTS released their first Korean studio album Dark & Wild" — nothing in the ref supported by two singles: "Danger" — not supported by ref "to a crowd of 6,500 fans" — not supported by ref Three unsourced facts (UTC)Reply[reply in one paragraph is concerning. The section you've been reading was recently trimmed for size at the request of other editors and I have restored those citations and done some rewrites. The tour you ask about was a large success for BTS in 2014-2015. Ready for next set of edit requests when you have time to add them here. ErnestKrause (talk) 23:39, 4 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Comments from AJona1992 Resolved comments from AJona1992 Overuse of "debuting" in the lead as a means of BTS coming into fruition in the music market. As well as the usage of "numerous" seems WP:PEACOCKish. Other examples include "youth" (mainstream section), and lead single throughout the article I've changed a couple of examples, but that is the accepted term for their trilogy. I don't understand the issue with lead single, it's an accepted term.--Wehwalt (talk) 20:38, 8 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Just because a word is a proper term doesn't excuse it from being overly used. I have no issue with "lead single", the issue is reading it in every sentence. - jona 🗵 19:27, 17 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] What other terminology could be used? I cannot possibly think of a better word to use than that one. Btspurplegalaxy 23:48, 17 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] There aren't any, all I was saying is that using "lead single" in every mention of an album; the leadoff single, it, etc., or quite frankly just mentioning the song following the mention of an album establishes the song was released first, why would you start off with a song release that wasn't its lead in the first place? - jona 🖾 17:02, 23 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I've cut it back to four uses, the first of them being linked.--Wehwalt (talk) 17:36, 23 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Why is the first instance of US not the United States? That information is included in the body of the article. These happen to be feats previously accomplished by other artists, you've only provided who last did it and not when it last was accomplished, not just who. - jona 🖾 19:27, 17 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] In the lead section, I have added the years when the feats were accomplished. I've removed about a dozen of these; they should now be removed from the article. The over 100 cites to Billboard tended not to use US when used. ErnestKrause (talk) 23:32, 8 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The Bubbling Under Hot 100 is a 25-song extension of the Hot 100 and readers unfamiliar with music charts published by Billboard will not understand that. For instance, if the song peaked at number two, without explaining the rules of the Bubbling Under Hot 100, will read as the song peaked at number two, and not their peak performance. Unless their chart entry was notable and Billboard provided an analyst on that, then peak positions should take precedence over just saying "X and Y entered the chart". That source is only used in one place in this article. Changing performance description with other citations. ErnestKrause (talk) 23:14, 8 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Saying "high demand" is unnecessary as "demand" suffices. [176] covers "All three albums of the Love Yourself: Tear later gained silver certification by the BPI for sales in the UK, becoming their third album to do so following Love Yourself: Answer and Map of the Soul: Persona." It supports the second sentence but does not appear to support the first sentence. Added source to support first sentence. Btspurplegalaxy 22:47, 21 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] [206] OK. [218] covers "Dynamite" debuted at number one on the US Billboard Hot 100 chart, becoming the fastest-selling single since Swift's "Look What You Made Me Do" in 2017—earning BTS their first chart topper and making them the first all-South Korean act (second Asian act overall) to earn a number one spot, but doesn't actually say it was its first week; I think that's OK though. However, I don't see support for the comparison to Swift or for the "first all-South Korean act (second Asian act overall)" comment. I'm looking at the text in the archive? replaced source and added an additional one supporting "first all-South Korean act (second Asian act overall)" Btspurplegalaxy 05:00, 22 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] [254] covers "At the end of that month, BTS held their first live performances before an in-person audience since before the pandemic. The band played four sold-out shows at SoFi Stadium in Los Angeles as a continuation of their Permission to Dance on Stage concert series." The review cited is, annoyingly, undated as far as I can see; not that there's any doubt about the dating, but if you could cite something that gives the second sentence. Changed the edit over to indicate the actual dates of the concert performances. ErnestKrause (talk) 19:36, 22 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] [272] OK. [296] is the citation for "BTS' lyrics have also addressed topics outside youth culture specifically. The song "Am I Wrong" from Wings questioned societal apathy towards the state of current events; the lyric "We're all dogs and pigs / we become dogs because we're angry" referenced South Korean Ministry of Education official Na Hyang-wook, who was a proponent of the caste system and described the average person as "dogs and pigs". BTS performed the song on television during the 2016 South Korean political scandal that led to the impeachment of former president Park Geun-hye." Two issues here: first, I don't think we can say "referenced", since the cited text specifically says it's only inferable and not made explicit by the band or the song. Second, I don't see any mention of a TV performance. Rewrite sentence to remove WP:NOR. ErnestKrause (talk) 22:35, 19 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] [332] covers "In 2020, BTS were given the James A. I don't see support for the second half of this. Added a source that supports them being the youngest honorees. I've also doubled check the recipients, and BTS are not the first musicians, so I removed that part entirely. Btspurplegalaxy 00:41, 18 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] [338] covers "The fan community...pushes to feature BTS' music on radio stations and television"; can you quote here the text from Ju that supports this? I think this is OK but is perhaps imprecisely phrased in the text -- one could read that as meaning they had never attended the Grammys before. How about "In February 2019, BTS attended the 61st Grammy Awards as the first K-Pop award presenters"? And I didn't need to use [145] for that, so perhaps it can be cut? It's not wrong as that was the first time they had ever attended the Grammys. Btspurplegalaxy 17:20, 24 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] OK, but as far as I can see that's not what the source is saying. "Bingham lost 9-10 against Ali Carter in the first round falling to the Crucible curse and becoming the 17th first-time champion unable to defend his title at the venue." Suggest a comma after "round" "to become the first Asian player ever to reach a World Championship final." Delete ever as redundant. "The 32 players for the event are selected through a mix of the world snooker rankings, and pre-tournament qualification rounds." list of two items, a serial comma is usually not used. "Professional payers below 17th place in rankings," Is this supposed to be players? "The afternoon session of the final was watched by audiences" used twice in this sentence. Maybe "The afternoon session of the final was watched 45 million people in China, the country's largest audience for a sporting event that year." "including 210 million on CCTV-5." Wikilink to CCTV-5? Those are my comments. Please ping when the above are addressed. Lee Vilenski (talk • contribs) 09:11, 9 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] I originally submitted this article for FAC just over 12 years ago. Sadly, it didn't pass that time and I kind of forgot about it for a decade or so. But the recent FA promotion of Burnley's other title-winning season in 1959-60 prompted me to have another go at this one. Since last time, I've managed to access the archives of an alternative local newspaper, which allowed me to add a bit more detail about the team's playing style and some more context around some of the matches. These kind of articles might not be to everyone's taste, but hopefully I have addressed the main concerns from the first nomination, so here we go! Added "The team's last competitive match had ended in a 0-2 defeat" - I would say that by far the most common way to report a football score is with the larger score first, irrespective of the outcome e.g. this source says "Liverpool lost 1-0 to Real Madrid' not "Liverpool lost 0-1 to Real Madrid". I would reconfigure any score shown like this one to show the larger score first. I thought I'd caught all these to be honest, thanks for spotting this one! Shouldn't the bit about Moorwood joining in October and the bit about Moorwood joining in September be in the paragraph starting "Transfer activity continued after the season began"? Rejigged "Bradford City, who had finished 15th in the league in 1919-20" - source? Added "Burnley moved to the top of the table on goal average" - link GA? Done One solitary league attendance is unknown? Yep, not given in Simpson. I had a look at the match report in the Burnley Express archive (where I presume Simpson also looked) and the Lancashire Daily Post (Preston's local paper) but no luck. As you probably know, attendances weren't officially recorded in those days so they weren't always reported in the second in the Second Round." - no reason for caps on second round Or third round Have changed these in the prose, left them capitalised in the table (but can also change here if you prefer, I tried it and didn't like the way it looked) "the Charity Shield, then known as the Dewar Shield" - are you sure this is true? Our article on the Community Shield makes no mention of it ever having that name, and RSSSF says "The FA Charity Shield was introduced in 1908 to succeed the Sheriff of London (Dewar) Shield" Must have been the Burnley Express correspondent using the old name, deleted that subclause. The tables need row scopes Forgive my ignorance, but what does this do other than just turn the cell grey? (done, by the way) It's to do with visually impaired site users who use a screen reader, it makes the screen reader read the contents of the table out correctly....or something..... -- ChrisTheDude (talk) 07:36, 30 May 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] The "Players having played at least one first-team match" table doesn't include the Lancs/East Lancs Cup games, which earlier you categorised as first team games - are the line-ups not recorded for these? I will have to go back to the library to check the newspaper reports, might be after the bank holiday before I get chance though. Managed to get to the library for an hour last night. I've added the ELCC and LSC apps/goals to the table and updated players' goals totals in the prose where appropriate. Even managed to get the attendances for the two ELCC games from the local papers (double checked the Preston league game though and definitely wasn't reported). BigDom (talk) 06:30, 31 May 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] In the aftermath section you use the {{inflation}} template in conjunction with {{currentyear}}, but the documentation for the former explicitly says not to do this Changed to the way you have used it in 1990-91 Gillingham F.C. season That's what I got - great read overall! -- ChrisTheDude (talk) 21:17, 29 May 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @ChrisTheDude (talk) 21:17, 29 May 2022 (UTC)Reply[need to do a quick library trip to check again for those missing lineups. Not necessarily an issue, but why do you have the website/work parameter included for the two 11v11 web citations ([17] and [50]), but not for the other two web citations ([44] and [63])? I think because the website name and the publisher are quite different, and naming the publisher (the Association of Football Statisticians) helps to give some credibility. I've added it for [63] too (website=givemefootball, publisher=Professional Football League) are basically identical. Both the book sources appear to be published by Burnley themselves What makes these reliable? True, they were. The Clarets Chronicles at least has been used in several other featured articles (e.g. Burnley F.C., History of Burnley F.C., H books are mostly based on contemporary newspaper reports, Football League records (team sheets, match reports, etc.) so I don't think there's much reason to doubt their veracity. In my experience, although these kind of books are often produced by the clubs themselves in the UK, I'm not really sure they're the kind of thing that WP:SPS is taking aim at (e.g. vanity press publications, blogs, and so on). What's the thinking behind linking to the Gale version of the Times archive? I have a Times subscription, and was expecting to be able to check these easily, but instead it goes to the Gale version of the Times archive? Library) but am not a Times subscriber, so the only way I had access was through that. I don't mind if the URLs are changed to the Times version, but I don't have the access to be able to do it. Links are all good, and I see no other formatting issues. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 23:08, 12 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Mike Christie: Thanks for the review, I've replied above. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 11:32, 15 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Your answers address my concerns. Source review is a pass. Everton on 23 April 1921 needing a draw to clinch the league championship": might be worth mentioning this is an away match? And say how many games were left when they clinched the title? Done. I see the attendance for the missing attendance figures in the non-league match table. Football League attendances only started to be officially recorded from the 1925-26 season, so before this you have to rely on the numbers being given in the match reports in the local newspapers, etc. Simpson's book doesn't give an attendance for these missing games, and I have also checked local papers from both teams through the British Newspaper Archive to see if I could find them myself, and got a couple that weren't there before (the ones with their own cites), but not the last few unfortunately. I should really have mentioned this in the source review above, but I didn't notice the fchd.info link in the "Final league position" section. FCHD came up in this review, and the nominator was able to replace it there; can you give additional information about it's very accurate and thoroughly researched, but I'm not yet convinced it meets our standards for FAs, since it's the work of a single person who is not a professional in the field. The table to that used the style of the table to that used the existing FA 1959-60 Burnley F.C. season and changed the source to 11v11 as used elsewhere in the article. A separate point: whether we keep FCHD or replace it, I don't think it's good style to have the external link in the middle of the article. An alternative would be to have a sentence there saying "Data sourced from FCHD" or whatever the source ends up being, with a footnote attached to the subsection heading. Now formatted as a regular inline reference. Only one match in the East Lancashire Charity Shield that only involved two clubs? This is a good question that I don't immediately know the answer to. This one will involve a library trip, I think. I see Birchenough was acquired in August 1920, and Dawson was injured in the opening match but returned after missing only two matches. Was Birchenough was let go again later in the season it seems plausible. Like you say, seems likely. Should be able to find a newspaper clipping announcing his signing which should say one way or the other. Again I should have raised this in the source for the player table data? The only citation is for the "Other" column. Added. Generally this is in excellent shape. Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 14:31, 17 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @BigDom: - just to make sure you didn't miss this. Hog Farm Talk 19:25, 23 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Thanks for the reminder, I'd seen the comments but then forgotten. I'll hopefully get some time to address them in the next couple of days. BigDom (talk) 05:50, 24 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] @Hog Farm and Mike Christie: Hi both. Really sorry, work has been hectic so far this week and I'm away Friday to Monday so it may be next week now by the time I get round to editing again. I haven't forgotten and I really appreciate you taking a look, Mike. Cheers, BigDom (talk) 17:13, 27 July 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Have addressed most of these, I'll try and fit in a library visit sometime this week to have a look into the others. Let me know if you spot anything else. Cheers, BigDom (talk) 07:33, 6 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Just to follow up on my library visit: East Lancs Charity Cup: this was interesting but not sure if there's anything worth putting in the article. So the cup was founded in 1882 and originally had four clubs. The teams taking part changed over the years, with Burnley joining in 1890 after Blackburn Olympia folded, and eventually the tournament expanded to six and then eight clubs as local semi-professional clubs were invited. a short entry in the Lancashire Evening Post on 1 May 1920 mentions the "recently revived" ELCC giving both Burnley and Blackburn Rovers a chance of winning some silverware in the forthcoming season (little did they know...). Like I say, not sure we should have an East Lancashire Charity Cup article unless some more in-depth coverage turns up to the source of winning some silverware in the forthcoming season (little did they know...). somewhere. Any article I could create would be cobbled together from very short (usually 1 paragraph) articles a few times a year in the local papers. Frank Birchenough: turns out he wasn't signed to replace Dawson. The Burnley News 14/8/1920 announces the signing of the new goalkeeper Birchenough on amateur terms for the reserves after impressing during a trial match the week before. It also mentions how Dawson is set to be fit for the start of the new season in two weeks' time. So nothing to add to the article, but an interesting; thanks for doing that research! I would bet that somewhere there is a complete season in two weeks' time. enough information for an ELCC article to be written, but perhaps not yet. Thanks for the update! Mike Christie (talk - contribs - library) 17:25, 15 August 2022 (UTC)Reply[reply] Support. The remaining two points are minor research questions that may not change the article.
